The broad equity markets have staged a dramatic rebound from the panic lows of March 23rd, with the S&P 500 rallying approximately 50% to trade just a few percentage points below all-time highs. Admittedly, the markets have been led by just a handful of stocks (with the big five mega-capitalization technology companies leading the charge – AAPL, MSFT, AMZN, GOOG and FB) but breadth has begun to improve recently as various signs indicate that the worst of the COVID-19 outbreak-induced recession has passed.

In the United States, the number of new COVID-19 cases has picked up during the phased reopening but, importantly, we have not seen a dramatic spike in either hospitalizations or deaths. Further, tremendous monetary and fiscal stimulus has resulted in improving economic statistics, with the JPMorgan Global Composite PMI at 50.8 in July, up from the depths of 26.2 in April, the US Composite PMI at 50.3 in July, up from 27.0 in April, the Eurozone Composite PMI at 54.9 in July, up from 13.6 in April and the Caixin China Composite PMI at 54.5, up from 27.5 in February. The inflection in both the manufacturing and services components of the global economy into expansionary territory has translated into job gains and the US Bureau of Labor Statistics recently reported that total nonfarm payroll employment rose by 1.8 million in July after a 4.8 million gain in June and a 2.5 million gain in May.

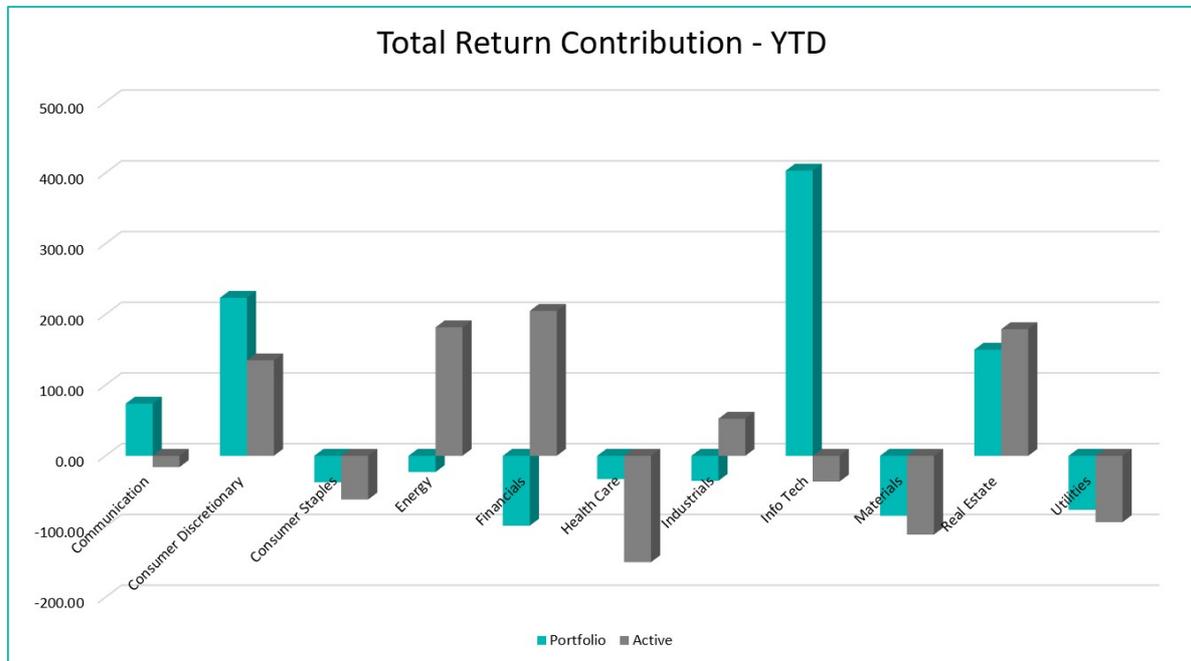

The question remains whether the recovery is self-sustaining or not, which will determine if equity valuations today can be justified by future expected earnings. Consensus estimates, according to various strategists and equity analysts, currently imply a solid 30% rebound in calendar 2021. However, bond investors don't seem to believe the recovery story, with the US 10-year Treasury yield again below 0.6%. Thankfully, pending incremental fiscal support and progress towards an effective vaccine offer reasons to be optimistic going forward. From a capital allocation perspective, an analysis of the S&P 500 dividend yield to the US 10-year Treasury yield still suggests that dividend paying securities are extremely attractive relative to bonds.

Therefore, we continue to believe that a diversified portfolio of dividend paying stocks (including global equities and publicly listed real estate and infrastructure securities) should generate solid total returns for investors over the balance of the cycle. Potential risks to our optimistic outlook include disappointment related to a Phase IV stimulus package, concerns regarding the rising number of new COVID-19 cases around the world and uncertainty surrounding the upcoming US Presidential election.

Top contributors to the year-to-date performance of the Ninepoint Focused Global Dividend Class by sector included Information Technology (+403 bps), Consumer Discretionary (+223 bps) and Real Estate (+150 bps) while top detractors by sector included Financials (-99 bps), Materials (-85 bps) and Utilities (-76 bps) on an absolute basis.

On a relative basis, positive return contributions from the Financials, Energy and Real Estate sectors were offset by negative contributions from the Health Care, Materials and Utilities sectors.

We are currently overweight the Consumer Discretionary and Health Care sectors, while underweight the Utilities, Energy and Consumer Staples sectors. At the end of the month, we were essentially fully invested but we have not made any dramatic sector allocation decisions other than overweight the Consumer Discretionary sector, led by our significant position in Amazon.

At the stock specific level, top contributors to the year-to-date performance included Amazon (+225 bps), Apple (+153 bps) and Microsoft (+145 bps). Top detractors year-to-date included NIKE (-98 bps), FMC Corporation (-85 bps) and Applied Materials (-85 bps).

In July, our top performing investments included Apple (+59 bps), Amazon (+54 bps) and Kansas City Southern (+42 bps) while Applied Materials (-18 bps), Keysight Technologies (-17 bps) and Assurant (-14 bps) underperformed.

The Ninepoint Focused Global Dividend Class was concentrated in 30 positions as at July 31, 2020 with the top 10 holdings accounting for approximately 36.8% of the fund. Over the prior fiscal year, 23 out of our 30 holdings have announced a dividend increase, with an average hike of 12.0% (median hike of 10.1%). We will continue to apply a disciplined investment process, balancing various quality and valuation metrics, in an effort to generate solid risk-adjusted returns.
